

Sabina Čehajić-Clancy received her PhD (“Responsibility and Denial: Antecedents of Acknowledgment, Collective Responsibility and Guilt”) in social psychology from the University of Sussex in 2008 under the supervision of Professor Rupert Brown. Society for the Psychological Studies of Social Issues (SPSSI) has awarded her with the Dissertation Award for 2008. Besides this, she has received the Harry Frank Guggenheim Award for her dissertation. At the same university, she has also received her Master of Science degree in applied social psychology as a British Chevening scholar. She works in the field of intergroup relations, more specifically on reconciliation in post-conflict societies, collective emotions of guilt and shame, moral responsibility, dehumanization, victimized identity, apology etc. She is working at the SSST University as an Associate Professor teaching political psychology and directing the Balkan Institute for Conflict Resolution, Responsibility and Reconciliation. She created and currently directs the first interdisciplinary master program in conflict analyses and reconciliation (CAR) in the Balkan region offered at SSST from October 2014. She has received funding for her work from the British Council, Open Society Institute, British Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Swiss embassy etc. Sabina has published numerous peer-reviewed research articles on the issues of acknowledgment, group-based responsibility, guilt, and intergroup forgiveness, book and several book chapters. In the last ten years, she has coordinated and supervised twelve research projects, presented her work on over thirty national and international conferences, and worked as a consultant for various NGO’s in BIH such as UNICEF, UNDP, Post-conflict Research Centre, Save the Children UK, and USAID etc. She is also a member of International Society of Political Psychology (ISPP) serving also on an Editorial Board, European Association of Social Psychology (EASP) and Society for Psychological Study of Social Issues (SPSSI), International Society of Genocide Scholars (IAGS) and American Psychological Society (APS). Currently she works at Stanford University as a Fulbright Visiting Scholar on issues related to positive emotions and beliefs in conflict contexts.
